Abstract

COVID-19 disease has the potency to increase maternal and child mortality rates. It is because pregnant women and children include the vulnerable groups. To increase maternal and child health resilience during the COVID-19 pandemic, community empowerment was needed. Many programs can be done through innovative planning and budgeting. The village fund can be an alternative solution in this condition. This research was qualitative research that used Focus Group Discussion with the participant contains village head, cadres, health professional, Department of Health agent, Village Community Empowerment Service, Regional Planning and Development Agency in the Cirebon Regency. Based on the research, maternal and child health
