Design Guidelines for Vegetative Approach Application to mitigate Riverbank Landslides
JST-3449-2022

Overall : Lack of supporting evidence. Poor Analysis. Wrong research methodology. Inconclusive result. Need to revisit and restructure the whole paper.

1. Shallow analysis, couldn't interpret the research and result correctly.
The analysis is still not in-depth/shallow interpretation, i.e.:
 - how does the physical characteristic corresponds to the mitigation riverbank slides? and how it's related to para 43 "this study emphasises the vegetation approach to reduce the risk of riverbank landslides in coastal areas through spatial analysis and ecological approach".....confusing statement
 - para 13 Analysis of vegetative Approach Application – the author is supposed to analyse the vegetation on the site of the Beringin river and not from secondary data. What happened on the site/case study?
The process in Para 56-60 (page 8) and Para 1-20 (page 9) is not portrayed in the analysis.
2. The methods is unclear and flaw - 4) The description of the methods is so garbled that it is difficult to evaluate whether the work is correct and whether the results support the conclusions
3. Conclusion is poorly addressed - can't see the contribution of the paper

Reviewer(s)' Comments to Author:

Comments to the Corresponding Author

1. The title is very broad. This is a case study at Semarang coastal area. The author need to include the site name at the title.
2. The scientific names in Table 1 is wrongly written. Genus name always start with a Capital letter and species epithet always in small caps e.g. Andira inermis (italic)

Reviewer: 2

Comments to the Corresponding Author

"The research method used a quantitative method with a spatial analysis method to determine the land use and river characteristics. The analysis results show residential settlements on the river border as a prioritized area for implementing a vegetative approach" - contradict the analysis/result, which is qualitative. The Authors are also not supposed to quote/cite in the Analysis/Result sections – supposed to provide substantive analysis of the topic – to create compelling elements. The authors are not addressing the previous comments
