Acknowledgements

I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge the contributors for their belief in this book project, the importance of the topic, and their efforts in their respective chapters that bring the world into one book.

I attribute the idea of this book—the study of urban in the global from a comparative perspective—to the various programs and opportunities offered at my Ph.D. institution (University of Southern California, USC) and current institution (Georgia State University, GSU). Through USC’s Urban and Global Fellowship Program and GSU’s Global Partnership for Better Cities Initiative, I was able to benefit from the lively discussions and collaborative research with scholars and students on these topics as well as embark on adventures to experience various global cities. Conferences organized by GSU and its partner institutions that took place in Atlanta 2016 and 2019, and in Hong Kong 2017, provide platforms for in-depth dialogue that further reinforced my interest in this area.

I thank Juliana Pitanguy and Sanjiev Mathiyazhagan at Springer for guiding me through the publishing process. Special thanks go to Lauren Forbes, doctoral student of Public Policy at GSU’s Andrew Young School of Policy Studies, for her excellent assistance in putting this book together.
